"Simon had command of a certain rebel work known as Fort Donelson. Orant invested and held it completely. Simon wanted asked upon what begins it thin. Simon wanted asked upon what begins the box. Grant told him that the terms were 'unconditional surrender.' Simon declared that as a Southerner and a chevalier he could not consent to that. Grant these wrote: I propose to move immediately upon your works.' Simon read the letter, and, like Captain Scott's sumon read the letter, and, like Captain Scott's form a very poor opinion of Grant. In the form a very poor opinion of Grant. In which is that he had no admiration for Grant. He will probably find at the Bermorratic Convention many who agree with him; and for the same reasons."

"What's hen Name and where's hen Hame!"—Among the gay throng of belies who graced the Presidential grounds Saturday evening last, listening to the strains of sweet music of the Marine Bland, was a young lady who was literally the "observed of all observers." Her beautiful face, radiant with innocent blushes, smiles, and dimples, was a fit subject for the breith of a Kellogg, and the symmetrical form a charming model for Ream's "Sylvian Maid." But we fear that the master touch of the painter's brush would fail to do justice to the beauty of the "speaking eye," or the cuming hand of the sculptor partray in marble a form so faulties. But how few of us are perfect! And sad to think that the fair being of whom we write is a cripple for life, and compelled to move about on crutches, having only one foot, and that one a pretty rival to Cinderella. Still she moved over the green award with dignified mien and as gracefully as a faws. Many a bachelor heart beat throbs of sympathy, while fair coustus bowed their heads in admiration as she passed them by. Under the unfortunate circumstances one would be ied to imagine that the face would naturally hear and and sundand one. On the would be led to imagine that the face wo contrary it was a cheerful one; full of hope and Christian resignation, and left a gleam of sunshine wherever it rested.
